SAM NEWHOUSE, REPORTER

Lady B has been a guiding star of Philly hip-hop and African-American radio waves since the '70s, when she dropped the masterful "To the Beat Y'All," one of the first singles recorded by a female rapper. That career came to a sudden halt when she was terminated from her position as a deejay for WRNB last week. But activists and fans say they're not letting Lady B go without a fight. AT LEAST 12 DEAD IN BUS CRASH IN MEXICO

Twelve people died and 18 were injured on Tuesday in Mexico's state of Quintana Roo when a tour bus lost control and rolled over during an excursion to ancient ruins.The bus was carrying 31 passengers, including citizens of the United States, Brazil and Sweden, authorities said. A child was among the dead. Quintana Roo is one of three states on Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula, which contains major tourist destinations. The passengers had been aboard a cruise ship, according to a statement from Costa Maya, the company that operated the bus. The tourists were headed to the archaeological zone of Chacchoben, an ancient Mayan ruin south of the resort town of Tulum, when the vehicle veered off the highway early on Tuesday morning.

TAX BILL HITS SNAGS IN APPROVAL PROCESS

2 Sweeping U.S. tax legislation appears to be on the verge of approval, lifting the prospects in particular for banks, telecoms, transports and other industries that stand to gain the most from lower corporate tax rates. The Republican-led U.S. House of Representatives hit a last-minute snag on Tuesday in their drive to approve the legislation favored by President Donald Trump. The plan on Capitol Hill was for the Senate to delete three offending provisions in the House version and vote on the bill, then send it back to the House for a vote on Wednesday. The bill slashes the corporate income tax rate to 21 percent from 35 percent. That would boost overall earnings for S&P 500 companies by 9.1 percent, according to UBS equity strategists. For more, see page 9.

NORTH KOREAN CYBER THREATS DISABLED

4 Facebook Inc and Microsoft Corp disabled a number of North Korean cyber threats last week, a White House official said on Tuesday, as the United States publicly blamed Pyongyang for a May cyber attack that crippled hospitals, banks and other companies. "Facebook took down accounts that stopped the operational execution of ongoing cyber attacks and Microsoft acted to patch existing attacks, not just the WannaCry attack initially," White House homeland security adviser Tom Bossert said on Tuesday. Bossert did not provide details on the actions by the two American tech heavyweights but said the U.S. government was calling on other companies to cooperate in cyber security defense. Facebook said it also notified individuals in contact with these accounts.

EUROPE WARNS CHRISTMAS AIR TRAVELLERS

5 European aviation safety authorities have urged airlines to remind passengers about how best to transport electronic devices containing lithium ion batteries over the busy Christmas travel period. Lithium ion batteries, found in devices such as laptops, mobile phones, tablets, and electronic cigarettes, are seen as a fire risk, and there are concerns that if a fire were to start in the hold of a plane, it could not easily be extinguished. EASA said that where such items are too large to be carried in the cabin, then they must be completely switched off, protected from accidental activation, and packaged suitably to avoid damage. They should also not be carried in the same bag as flammable items such as perfume or aerosols.

Lady B's defenders want her returned to the airwaves

Longtime Philly radio icon's firing "unacceptable," supporters say.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

For decades, Lady B has been a mainstay of Philly culture. She was a pioneering female rapper (known for her 1979 hit "To the Beat Y'all") and an integral member of the hip-hop scene as one of the first DJs to play recordings by local artists like Will Smith. But she was also known for her cultural insights and philanthropic efforts around Philly.

Earlier this month, those decades of history came to a screeching halt when Lady B was let go from her position deejaying classic R&B and hip-hop at Old School 100.3 WRNB.

No clear explanation has yet been given for the firing, but Lady B's supporters aren't taking it without a fight. At a news conference on Tuesday at the offices of the NAACP's Philly branch, they promised to assemble "B's Army" for a rally on Dec. 21 outside her old station's offices to demand a spot for Lady B on the airwaves.

"The firing of Lady B is not only an affront to her widespread and loyal listening audience," organizers wrote, "it is also an unprofessional act of blatant disrespect to the extensive community she serves in her relentless efforts to end gun violence, educate the youth, aid the elderly and assist the poor."

Lady B, also known as Wendy Clark, started as an intern to Mary Mason, the queen of Philly radio. She made her name in the 1980s at Power 99 FM, and in recent years DJed "The Lady B Show" on weekdays from 2 to 7 p.m. on 100.3 FM. Fans recalled her as a positive influence on Philadelphia.

"Young people didn't listen to their parents, but they listened to her," said City Councilwoman Cindy Bass. "She was a voice that a generation listened to, from the late '70s, '80s and '90s up to today. … To take her away so swiftly, without any sort of explanation, I just find unacceptable."

Urban One, which owns WRNB, did not respond to requests for comments on the firing.

Lady B herself has not complained, announcing the end of her career on Dec. 12 with positivity:

"I am truly overwhelmed by the outpouring of love and support from all of you," she wrote in a Facebook post thanking her fans. "I am still here for you. I'm not going anywhere. I'll still be in the community."

But activist, civil rights attorney and Lady B supporter Michael Coard questioned why Lady B was let go and said he believes there were disputes over her "culture-oriented programming."

"Lady B wasn't just playing mindless music. She was also dealing with community concerns," Coard said. "She still had the great R&B. She still had the old-school hip-hop, but every now and then, she'd throw in a little more of the community stuff."

In between socially conscious interludes on everything from black history to HBCUs and how homeowners could enroll in LIHEAP, Lady B faced criticism from management, Coard believes.

"We clearly know it wasn't for any inappropriate behavior or unprofessional action by Lady B — it was simply a decision by the management," Coard said. "Any time major corporations in America see black folks becoming enlightened and empowered, they have to pull it."

Minister Rodney Muhammad, head of the Philly NAACP, said Lady B's termination is part of a troubling trend, linking it to the end of contracts for black commentators Roland Martin, also with News 1, and Tom Joyner, with the same station, who will be retiring soon.

"Under Trump's America, we see a move now to dismantle effective black programming in the country," Muhammad said. "That's a disservice not only to us, but to the United States of America."

Sheriff's confrontation with lawyer in court was unprovoked, lawsuit says

A 72-year-old attorney says he was attacked by security officers after criticizing their manners.

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

An elderly Philadelphia attorney is suing five deputy sheriffs after a verbal exchange with one of them spiraled into a wild caught-on-camera melee that left him with a broken and dislocated shoulder.

It started when Clifford Haines, 72, criticized a sheriff's behavior, said Pat Pierce, the attorney handling Haines' lawsuit.

"He was verbally abused by the sheriff and had the temerity to say, 'You really shouldn't talk to members of the public like that, it's not appropriate,'" Pierce said. "For saying that, he was subjected to what you saw on the videotape."

A PR firm representing the Philly Sheriff's Office said it was unaware of Haines' lawsuit against five unnamed deputy sheriffs and one sergeant. "We have not been notified about this lawsuit and have no comment on the matter," the firm said. The office previously claimed Haines started the incident by attacking a sheriff, which is contrary to surveillance video of the Aug. 22 incident, but had no comment on the incident itself or whether the sheriffs involved were disciplined.

According to Pierce, as Haines exited the CJC to turn his phone off (which was sealed in a secure pouch), a deputy sheriff refused to let him exit through one side of the court entrance. Sheriffs sometimes allow people to both exit or enter through either side of the CJC's main lobby, and sometimes convert one side into entrance- or exit-only.

As Haines returned, he told the sheriff, "You have a duty to the public to behave appropriately," Pierce said.

Surveillance video of the incident posted online by Pierce's firm shows the unidentified sheriff respond by pushing Haines back by the chest. When Haines swiped the sheriff's fingers away, four more sheriffs jumped in and grabbed the attorney from all sides, dragging him down the metal detector conveyor belt before slamming him to the floor and pinning him.

Haines suffered a shoulder fracture and dislocation and was detained for the following 18 hours, Pierce said.

That time included an hour in the CJC basement "screaming in agony" with his hands cuffed behind his back, being transported to Hahnemann Hospital where his fracture was treated, and then to a police station, where he was released around 5 a.m. the next day after the DA declined to file charges against him.

Haines wore a sling for a month, continues physical rehabilitation and still faces impairments using his right arm, he said.

Pierce said the case touches on an issue many court-users have experienced.

"I've heard from all quarters that people going into the CJC feel like they're being abused," Pierce said. "It's a sense of entitlement because they're carrying a badge. Their job is to protect and serve the public, not abuse them."

Surveillance video from the Criminal Justice Center at 13th and Filbert shows five sheriffs restraining 72-year-old lawyer Clifford Haines, who is now suing the sheriffs. COURTESY OF GREENBLATT PIERCE FUNT AND FLORES

Lamb-loving PETA activists strip down to protest wool

Seminude bodypainted PETA volunteers protest against the wool industry near Dilworth Park in Center City on Tuesday. SAM NEWHOUSE

Animal-rights protesters weren't sheepish about shedding all in Dilworth Park.

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

PETA activists bared it all Tuesday as they braved chilly temperatures to dramatize the plight of lambs trapped in the industrial wool industry, which PETA says is cruel to animals.

Holding stuffed effigies of 'dead lambs,' the trio interrupted holiday shoppers visiting the Christmas Village at Dilworth Park with their passionate plea to purchase wool alternatives and avoid products made by exploiting unwilling animals.

"Gentle sheep are beaten until they're bloody and broken for the sake of wool sweaters and scarves," PETA Executive Vice President Tracy Reiman said in a press release. "PETA is calling on holiday shoppers to give sheep some peace on Earth this year by keeping wool apparel off their lists."

PETA (People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals) urged customers to read labels, avoid wool, angora and cashmere and instead buy products made of cotton or synthetic materials.

The focus on wool comes in the wake of recent PETA investigations of wool exporters in Australia that allegedly caught on video workers punching, kicking, stomping and stabbing sheep inside the operations.

"Shearers are often paid by volume, not by the hour, which encourages fast, violent work that can lead to gaping wounds on sheep's bodies," PETA said in a press release. "The wounds are then stitched closed—without giving the animals any painkillers."

Maybe PETA has reason to be confident: earlier this year, it celebrated a victory after the New Jersey-based Burlington Coat Factory retailer went fur-free across its 600 stores after 10 months of negotiations with PETA.

SEXUAL MISCONDUCT

Sexual misconduct outcry makes US lawyers rethink confidentiality

The wave of sexual misconduct allegations made against dozens of powerful men in recent weeks is causing lawyers to rethink how they handle such cases, including the longstanding use of confidentiality agreements.

As more women, and sometimes men, speak out, settlement deals with non-disclosure agreements (NDAs) that bar victims from discussing past claims of harassment or abuse have come under fire, with many lawmakers and advocacy groups now arguing they should be abolished.

Lawyers who represent plaintiffs and defendants in harassment cases said they had previously assumed NDAs, which are rarely breached, would be upheld in court if challenged. But now there is a greater probability courts could void such agreements deeming them against the public interest.

"I'd be surprised to find a lawyer who is confident in the enforceability of an NDA right now," says Ron Shechtman, head of the employment law practice at law firm Pryor Cashman, which represents employers.

Several lawyers said they are more likely to recommend executives or other high-profile individuals facing misconduct claims step down rather than try to defend themselves or make the allegations go away.

But lawyers say weakening confidentiality could have consequences for accusers too. Settlements could be smaller without a promise of secrecy. Confidentiality agreements, at least in some cases, can also prevent men accused of misconduct from falsely characterizing claims against them.

Plaintiffs' lawyers said that their advice may vary more depending on their clients' goals. Some may want to go public so harassers cannot claim new victims, said New York lawyer Douglas Wigdor. Others, however, "want confidentiality just as much as the person who harassed them." REUTERS

White House temporarily shuts down the 'We the People' online petition site

Administration says the page is under maintenance and will be back up in late January.

The White House is revamping their petition site. WE THE PEOPLE WEB ARCHIVE

"We the People," a website launched by the Obama administration to fast-track petitions to White House staff, has been temporarily shut down.

The Associated Press reported that the platform will return in late January as a new site and that the move will save taxpayers $1.3 million a year, according to one White House official.

This comes less than a week after the White House revamped their website, WhiteHouse.gov.

"[The new site] adapts the U.S. web design standards and uses a style that is clean, simple and presidential," a White House official told the Washington Examiner. It was estimated by this official that the redesign could save taxpayers up to $3 million annually, a benchmark reportedly separate from the "We the People" maintenance savings.

According to Huffington Post, the White House is supposed to issue a response to any petition created on "We the People" if it collects over 100,000 signatures within 30 days.

However, the Trump administration has failed to respond to the 17 petitions that have merited that attention, such as one calling on Trump to release his tax returns and one, even, calling for his resignation.

Banks, healthcare service firms among winners in tax bill

Legislators on Capitol Hill will revote on the tax bill on Wednesday. GETTY IMAGES

Sweeping tax legislation appeared to be on the verge of approval on Tuesday night, lifting the prospects in particular for banks, telecoms, transports and other industries that stand to gain the most from lower corporate tax rates.

The Republican-led U.S. House of Representatives hit a last-minute snag on Tuesday in their drive to approve the legislation favored by President Donald Trump. The plan on Capitol Hill was for the Senate to delete three offending provisions in the House version and vote on the bill, then send it back to the House for a vote on Wednesday.

The industries that stand to benefit most from the new tax rates are telecoms, transportation, retail and banks, analysts said.

Healthcare
Domestically geared healthcare companies that focus on services are poised to benefit from the lower tax rate.

Hospital operator Universal Health Services Inc., testing company Quest Diagnostics Inc. and wholesaler Cardinal Health Inc. are among the service companies set to benefit the most, according to Mizuho Securities.

Banks
Banks are expected to be among the biggest winners from a lower tax rate. The S&P 500 banks index has soared 9 percent since mid-November as the tax bill began moving swiftly through Congress. Of the major S&P sectors, financials pay the highest effective tax rate at 27.5 percent, according to Wells Fargo.

Tech
One area where large tech companies could benefit is by spending cash held overseas for stock buybacks that boost earnings per share. UBS points to Cisco Systems Inc. and Qualcomm Inc. as companies that could see among the biggest buyback boosts.

T.J. Miller denies sexual assault allegations

Woof.

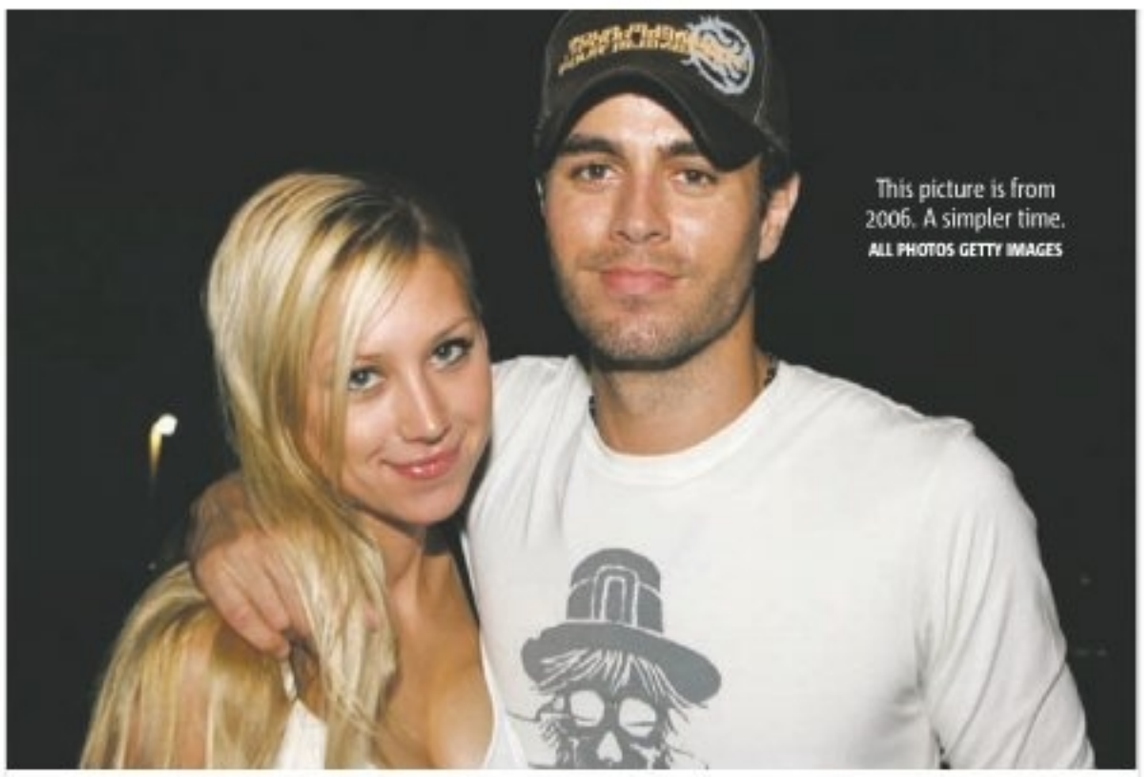
T.J. Miller — who kind of looks like a jester from the American Old West — has been accused of sexually assaulting and punching a woman while studying at George Washington University.

The "Silicon Valley" alum and the alleged victim, who asked to remain anonymous, entered into a relationship in the fall of 2001. She says there were many incidents of abuse in their relationship, telling the Daily Beast the once they were "fooling around" and Miller began "shaking [her] violently" and punched her in the mouth.

Despite the fact that and witnesses have corroborated the woman's story, Miller and his wife released a joint statement, accusing the woman of "using the current climate to bandwagon and launch these false accusations again." Gross.

"It is unfortunate that she is choosing this route as it undermines the important movement to make women feel safe coming forward about legitimate claims against real known predators."

Hmm. Could it be that the Millers doth protest too much?



This picture is from 2006. A simpler time.

Enrique & Anna are parents now

Remember Enrique Iglesias and Anna Kournikova? Same! Well, here's some news about them: They secretly had twins the other day.

The couple kept the pregnancy under wraps, and welcomed a boy and a girl on Saturday in Miami. Their names, according to TMZ, are Nicholas and Lucy. Normal!

A source confirmed the news to People, saying "I saw her cute belly. A friend told me like five months ago [that] they were pregnant but keeping it very, very undercover."

The newborns are the first children of both Iglesias, 42, and Kournikova, 36. They've been together for over a decade.

Well, congratulations to y'all — on the babies and being, shockingly, relatively normal. Mazel!

Details on Georgina Chapman's prenup

Georgina Chapman is about to be even richer.

The Marchesa designer announced in October that she was leaving husband Harvey Weinstein. And according to the terms of the former couple's prenuptial agreement, she may receive as much as $12 million.

According to TMZ, their prenup states that Chapman is supposed to receive $300,000 annually in spousal support for each year of marriage. But after the 10-year-mark — which happened to be last Friday — that amount jumps up to $400,000 for each year of marriage.

She will also reportedly get a lump sum payment of $4.75 million for her share of marital assets, and $3 million for a housing allowance.

The catch? The prenup is basically a gag order — both parties must agree not to publish diaries, letters or photographs, and can't talk about the relationship in interviews.

To be fair, Weinstein is reportedly worth $250 million, and Chapman is worth about $20 million. So $11.75 mil? That's basically pennies for these two.

A pretty penny.

Meryl says she didn't know

Meryl Streep would like to remind you: She did not know.

Over the weekend, Rose McGowan took to Twitter to call out "The Post" actress. "Actresses, like Meryl Streep, who happily worked for The Pig Monster, are wearing black @goldenglobes in a silent protest," she wrote. "YOUR SILENCE is THE problem."

McGowan later deleted the tweet, but Streep issued a very long statement to the Huffington Post in response.

"It hurt to be attacked by Rose McGowan in banner headlines this weekend," she wrote. "But I want to let her know I did not know about Weinstein's crimes.

"I wasn't deliberately silent," she continues. "I didn't know. I don't tacitly approve of rape. I didn't know. I don't like young women being assaulted. I didn't know this was happening."

So to be clear, Streep did not know. Just in case you weren't convinced by her saying, "I didn't know" multiple times in rapid succession.

As a big-budget musical, "The Greatest Showman" has plenty of splendor and spectacle, making it a genuinely uplifting and gorgeous watch. The cast simmers with passion and heart. And director Michael Gracey enhances and elevates the rousing musical sequences: the songs never feel gratuitous. Instead, they are rooted in the characters and actors who perform them.

The major issue is that the plot falls completely flat. While the overall story is intriguing, the film never delves into it with enough detail to strike a chord. By the end of its running time, you're left wanting much more.

Ultimately, "The Greatest Showman" feels more like an amalgamation of undeniably catchy music videos than a coherent film. Thankfully, though, it still provides more than enough moments of pomp, joy and poignancy to stop you from judging those shortcomings too harshly.

"Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle"

Director: Jake Kasdan
Stars: Dwayne Johnson, Kevin Hart

The original "Jumanji" was memorable for its sense of chaos and genuine peril. But its followup plays it too safe to do the same. The beats of the film are too familiar to get overly excited about, and its conclusion is needlessly overcomplicated. It's never not enjoyable, though: What does keep "Jumanji: Welcome To The Jungle" bobbing along is its sense of humor.

Kevin Hart and Jack Black, especially, bring plenty of laughs, selling the surreal absurdity of their plight in a relatable way that takes advantage of their best qualities. So while everything plays out in a relatively tame and predictable manner, the "Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle" has enough fun and laughs to be deemed worthwhile — but ultimately, forgettable. GW

Philly already has the Union League and the Pyramid Club (and probably even more members-only spots only for those in the know) but in 2019, the city's top movers and shakers will have a new spot to escape to: the Fitler Club.

Located at 2400 Market St., the 75,000-square-foot space overlooks the Schuylkill River and is more than a place to grab a cocktail and a bite. It will feature a fitness center, rock-climbing wall, golf simulator, luxury spa, a 75-foot lap pool, a movie theater, a daycare center, coworking spaces, private office suites — basically, you'll never have to leave. Oh, and there's 10,000 feet of private event space that includes a ballroom and a bowling alley, in case you want to host a company party or a gala.

Founder and CEO David Gutstadt, a hospitality and lifestyle guru with 20 years in the industry, moved to Philly six years ago with his wife and became enamored with the city.

"Philly is on the cusp of amazing things. We should have something that's world-class and unique to the city of Philadelphia," he says.

According to Gutstadt, the city needs a place where the city's leaders can socialize in style.

"If Soho House grew up, met Equinox and had a baby, it would look like the Fitler Club," he says. "Every city has its version of the private members club. This is bringing it forward, making it relevant today by embracing health, wellness, diversity and social engagement."

Sounds like a lot for one person to manage, especially someone not originally from the area. Luckily he's got an executive team with Philly roots to move the project along. The team includes chef Kevin Sbraga serving as culinary director, longtime Vetri partner Jeff Benjamin serving as general manager and Alyssa Devore, formerly of Calico Corners, serving as director of marketing.

"They are all very local and familiar with the fabric of Philadelphia," Gutstadt says.

So how does one get to be a member at The Fitler Club? Invitations have not been sent out to apply just yet.

"We're going through the early round of collecting names and soliciting interest," notes Gutstadt. "By the spring, we're going to start distributing and accepting applications."

For more information, visit fitlerclub.com

How to make a last-minute holiday card

#Goals. ISTOCK

Follow these simple steps to create your own DIY photobooth so you can take your holiday photos at home.

@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

So you haven't made a holiday card yet, and you're worried that with everything else piling up on your end-of-the-year to-do list, you might have to skip it. That's fine, no judgment. But if you want, you can still pull it off, if you change your approach.

For one, stop thinking you have to send in time for Christmas, when you could make a perfectly acceptable New Year's card instead. Secondly, you don't have to get all fancy or hire a professional photographer. You can put together a charming, cheery photo on your own by creating your own DIY photo booth, borrowing a friend (or a tripod) and downloading a decent photo-editing app. Here's everything you need to pull it off.

Grab a friend or a tripod

Surely you have a pal who will do you the solid of snapping like, 10 photos of you. Give them a couple beers, they give you 30 minutes of their time. If you don't have any friends or aren't in the mood to bother the ones you do have, invest in a cheap tripod for your smartphone. For $10.99, Amazon Prime has an "Octopus style" portable and adjustable tripod stand holder for smartphones that you can set up as needed. Then all you need to do is set the photo timer on your phone, which you can do by opening your photo app, tapping the timer icon in the top right and selecting three or 10 seconds.

Create your own backdrop

Pick a blank wall in your home that will serve as the backdrop for your photo. It's up to you how you want to decorate it. Simple but effective options include taping up festive wrapping paper or colorful tissue paper, tacking up a piece of fabric, hanging streamers, stringing holiday lights — the list goes on. This is where Pinterest comes in! (And if you're too lazy to do it yourself, you can always order a themed photobooth kit, backdrops, props and all, off Amazon Prime.)

Gather your props

These will depend on your theme, whether it's Christmas, Hanukkah, New Year's, etc, but definitely do not spend much moola on photobooth props. Source Party City, the dollar store, or Amazon Prime to find your goofy wigs, Santa hats, plastic menorahs, 2018 glasses, ball drops, you get the idea.

Get the lighting right

Last but not least, you gotta pick out a lighting scheme. Don't rely on overhead lighting; you'll need a light source you can aim directly on your photobooth to make sure your photo is bright enough. A tree lamp with adjustable spotlights, as will a work light that you can clamp on to where you need it. If you need to dim the light, you can cover it with a white sheet — just make sure it's not directly touching the bulb so 2017 doesn't go up in flames.

Final edits

Once you've taken a photo you don't hate, you can touch it up on Instagram or with a free iPhone photo-editing app like VSCO or Adobe Photoshop Express. You can create a custom holiday card at the photo department of any Walgreen's or do it on your phone with apps such as Pic Collage, Greetings, or Just Wink. Print and you're done!

NFL power rankings | by Luke Miller

No. 1

Eagles
12-2 (W vs. NYG)

The Eagles overcame a poor defensive start that saw them fall behind 20-7 behind four touchdown passes from Nick Foles in his 2017 debut as the Eagles starting quarterback and a late goal line stand that redeemed the defense.

No. 2

Patriots
11-3 (W vs. PIT)

The Pats didn't make it out of Pittsburgh completely unscathed. They're down one Rex Burkhead. But surviving the Steelers final drive means completing a sweep of the Bills and handling the Jets will give them home field advantage. It sure was nice to have Gronk back on the field.

No. 3

Vikings
11-3 (W vs. CIN)

The Vikings clinched the NFC North in style, dismantling the Bengals. Teddy Bridgewater returned and threw a pick on a tipped ball on the first pass he's thrown in over a year. The Vikings have to keep winning to lock up their first-round bye in the playoffs but will get the Packers without Aaron Rodgers.

No. 4

Steelers
11-3 (L vs. NE)

The bad news is that the Steelers lost Antonio Brown and, obviously, the game. The good news is Brown's injury shouldn't cause him to miss the playoffs. Now their focus must be taking care of business against the Texans and Browns and getting the bye week once the playoffs begin.

No. 5

Rams
10-4 (W vs. SEA)

The Rams showed Seattle exactly who owns the division in the roughest way possible, taking a 40-0 lead on the way to handing Pete Carroll his worst loss as Seahawks head coach. Todd Gurley's name should be appearing in MVP talks as other award candidates continue getting hurt.

No. 6

Panthers
10-4 (W vs. GB)

All of the headlines may have centered on Aaron Rodgers return to try and guide the Packers into the playoffs, but it was Cam Newton who threw four touchdowns and shepherded Green Bay to elimination while keeping the pressure on the Saints in the NFC South.

No. 7

Saints
10-4 (W vs. NYJ)

Alvin Kamara didn't miss any time for the Saints, but it was Mark Ingram who provided 151 yards and two-touchdowns to lead the win over the Jets in a surprising close late contest. The Saints remain in first place in the NFC South thanks to their two wins over the Panthers.

No. 8

Jaguars
10-4 (W vs. HOU)

Jacksonville have clinched their first playoff berth in a decade and remain in the running for a first round bye. This team continues to win in new ways (hello Blake Bortles!) on offense but has relied on its stellar defense all season. That's what's changed in Jacksonville.

No. 9

Falcons
9-5 (W vs. TB)

Devonta Freeman led the Falcons to victory with 126 yards rushing during a quiet night for the passing offense. The Falcons have positioned themselves well. They're in the final wild card spot at the moment but winning against Carolina and New Orleans would see them take over the division.

No. 10

Chiefs
8-6 (W vs. LAC)

Kareem Hunt followed his first 100-yard outing in several weeks with a 200-total yard, multiple touchdown effort against LA. Marcus Peters added two interceptions and a fumble recovery. Beating the Raiders and Chargers in convincing fashion the last two weeks has moved them toward an AFC West title.

Best of the rest

11— Ravens (8-6)
12— Chargers (7-7)
13— Cowboys (8-6)
14— Seahawks (8-6)
15— Lions (8-6)
16— Bills (8-6)
17— Titans (8-6)
18— Packers (7-7)
19— Washington (6-8)
20— Dolphins (6-8)
21— Raiders (6-8)
22— Cardinals (6-8)
23— 49ers (4-10)
24— Broncos (5-9)
25— Jets (5-9)

Could Eagles rest starters for remaining two games?

The Eagles clinched a first-round playoff bye with their win in New York last Sunday. But there is still more to play for.

A win against the Raiders Monday night (on Christmas Day eve) will clinch the No. 1 seed in the NFC and therefore homefield advantage throughout the playoffs — until the Super Bowl, held in Minnesota.

In theory, home playoff games are a huge advantage for the Eagles. Boasting a 6-0 mark from Lincoln Financial Field this season, Philly could force indoor teams like the Vikings, Saints or Falcons to uncomfortably face the elements in South Philadelphia during a January game.

Following the Raiders game the Eagles will have a second chance to clinch the No. 1 seed against Dallas on Dec. 31. So what does that mean for Philly's staters?

The Eagles have an extra day of rest before Monday night's home game. GETTY IMAGES

"I've begun thinking, but my focus is winning the game on Monday night, because that to me is the most important thing," Eagles head coach Doug Pederson said. "Once we get to next week, we'll figure out next week ... we control our destiny right now. So that's the focus for me."

Winning against Oakland on "Monday Night Football" (an 8:30 p.m. start on ESPN) is a big deal right?

Well not necessarily.

If the Packers — eliminated from playoff contention last week — can play spoilers against the Vikings before the Eagles take the field in Week 16. Which would hand Philly the No. 1 seed before they suit up Monday.

"You just make the best decisions for your football team and if that means resting a guy, you rest a guy, or two or three," Pederson said. "But you also have to maintain the edge with these players, and you've got to maintain that confidence and that dominating swagger and you've got to keep that alive. It's not a preseason game where you can rest in week four and rest all your guys." EVAN MACY

Flyers must use caution to avoid overworking red-hot goalie Elliott

The Flyers' recent success has them back in the playoff picture.

ERIC GOLDSTEIN
@EricEsponda
sports@metro.us

The Flyers are back in action again Wednesday night, an 8 p.m. start at home against the Red Wings. GETTY IMAGES

Brian Elliott needs a break — and deserves one.

The Flyers goalie has latched the team on his shoulders and carried them the entire month of December. He has made eight straight starts, including one set of back-to-back games, in the last 17 days and started 11 of the team's last 12 games.

When asked on Monday following a 4-1 loss to the Kings if he needed a day off, Elliott sidestepped the issue.

"That's not a question for me. That's a question for the coach," Elliott said. "Like I said, I will take the opportunity [to play] anytime I get it."

Elliott was forced into non-stop duty when backup goalie Michal Neuvirth suffered an injury last month and the Flyers recalled Alex Lyon from the Phantoms. Since Lyon has little NHL experience and the Flyers can ill-afford to give up points, Elliott was thrust into the everyday role.

"Our team has confidence in him," Flyers coach Dave Hakstol said. "That's a real position of strength for our bench and for the guys that are out on the ice. It's not just the things that you see on a nightly basis on game nights. Brian does such a good job on a daily basis of approaching his day of work.

"I think that is something guys can feed off of. They know he does the work. He is prepared. I think that gives everyone a level of confidence."

Lately, the results alone have given the team confidence.

Despite the workload, Elliott went 6-2 during the stretch and was named the NHL's Third Star of the Week for the week of Dec. 4-11 and then followed it up last week by being selected as the Second Star of the Week. Sandwiched in between the two losses were six straight wins, where Elliott posted a 1.48 goals against average and .949 save percentage.

In 25 starts this season, Elliott, who recorded his 200th career win on Dec. 7 in Vancouver, is 12-7-6 with a 2.66 goals against average and .913 save percentage.

While Elliott has been on a roll, the Flyers need to resist pushing the 32-year-old veteran much further. Too much ice time could result in fatigue or injury.

Fortunately, relief is on the way.

Expect Elliott in net for Wednesday's home tilt with the Red Wings but Neuvirth is set to return this week. Elliott and Neuvirth will probably split games on Friday and Saturday against the Sabres and Blue Jackets, respectively.

"Brian's been good from Day 1 so he's an outstanding pro," Hakstol said. "He shows up and he does his job and he does it very well for our team."

Flyers finding stride

Flyers before Dec. 4 — 8-11-7 record, 2.61 gpg average, 10-game losing streak

Flyers since — 6-1-0 record, 3.1 gpg average, 6-game win streak

Currently 4 games out of playoff spot*

Aries Emotional purchases or spontaneous changes will be met with regret once you have time to think about what you've done or signed up for.

Taurus Don't let emotions overrule common sense. Take care of professional and financial matters responsibly to ease your stress and better enjoy your downtime.

Gemini Instinctive emotional actions will lead to regret. Don't make promises you cannot keep. Commitments must be realistic. Learn from your mistakes to avoid criticism.

Cancer Headstrong actions will be costly. Don't sign up for something that could break your budget. Walk away from situations that appear to be unpredictable.

Leo Stay focused on what you have yet to accomplish. Leaving unfinished business for someone else to take care of will make you look bad. Avoid indulgent behavior.

Virgo Your discipline will help you conquer whatever task or responsibility you are handed. A positive attitude will be helpful when dealing with something you find confusing.

Libra Don't get all worked up over nothing. Embrace whatever comes your way and turn it into something that is beneficial to you. A personal change looks inviting.

Scorpio Look for unusual lifestyle choices to come up with the perfect way to spend the holiday season. A disciplined approach to money matters will help decrease debt.

Sagittarius Common sense should be a priority when dealing with others. Be honest and expect the same in return. Truth matters and will shape what unfolds from now on.

Capricorn Listen to your heart and share your thoughts with someone you feel close to. Don't let people from your past disrupt your life. Avoid making hasty decisions.

Aquarius Don't be tempted by people making rash or erratic choices. You are best off taking a wait-and-see attitude, especially if money or your physical health is at stake.

Pisces Not everyone will be forthcoming regarding what they want. Do what will help you the most. Take care of unfinished personal business. EUGENIA LAST

WE GIVE THANKS THIS HOLIDAY SEASON

Meadowview Rehabilitation and Nursing has a lot to be thankful for this holiday season. We are so grateful for the continued support from our wonderful community, but most of all to thank our amazing staff. Without them we would not be able to continue to succeed and take care of our extended family, our residents. We are so grateful for all that they do and their constant devotion, compassion and their tireless effort in patient care. We are honored they are part of the Meadowview family, they have helped Meadowview become the leader in quality care it's become today.
